“We have our gag gift tradition,” she said. “Kay does her gag gifts and, honestly, sometimes the gifts are so stupid they’re not even funny, but the way that she presents them is the funniest thing ever.”

Listen to Robertson reveal her family’s holiday traditions—and the positive ways she and her family are impacting the world around them:

The Robertson family roars in laughter as Miss Kay gives the gifts out each year during a special Christmas night gathering at Phil and Kay Robertson’s home.

Beyond that comical event, Robertson said the most consistent Robertson family holiday tradition is a slew of homemade cooking.

“There is always a lot of food, and it’s always homemade,” she said. “It is an amazing array of food, and we all have our favorite things. When we get together, we all know we’re going to have seafood of some sort.”

In addition to seafood, she said it takes three Cajun turkeys to feed the Robertson clan.

Invoking scenes presented on A&E's Duck Dynasty, everyone gathers the Wednesday night before Thanksgiving and then again on Christmas night. It's a true celebration surrounding the real meaning of the season.
