

Evangel University President Encourages Women on Leading During a Pandemic

The integration of faith and learning is central to the development of future world changers. And those in leadership positions who have the ability to speak into the lives of young people find themselves in a critical role.

Dr. Carol A. Taylor has served as the president of Evangel University, a private Christian university nestled in the heart of the Missouri Ozarks, for the last seven years. In total, she has spent 40 years of her life in service to students in a variety of leadership roles. As a woman, this leadership trajectory is one that serves as an example to others of the importance of finding your voice, remaining steadfast in your convictions and feeling confident in your skills.

Dr. Taylor reflects on her life of service, the importance of Christian higher education, lessons learned while leading through a pandemic and the unique role of women in leadership in this episode of Charisma Connection on the Charisma Podcast Network.
