

Ex-FEMA Worker Claims Anti-Trump Bias Came from Leadership

Just because you're paranoid, it doesn't mean you're wrong.

And for any supporters of President-elect Donald Trump who feel that they've been unfairly targeted by the government, but were summarily dismissed by the angry left as conspiracy theorists—turns out you were right.

One of the more foul and vile “We told you so” moments in recent history occurred shortly after the 2024 election.

On Friday, Nov. 8, The Daily Wire published a blistering report revealing that at least one Federal Emergency Management Agency official had directed her workers not to canvas any homes that belonged to Trump supporters in the aftermath of Hurricanes Helene and Milton.

A supervisor identified as Marn'i Washington was promptly let go and FEMA apologized profusely.

“While we believe this is an isolated incident, we have taken measures to remove the employee from their role and are investigating the matter to prevent this from happening ever again,” a FEMA representative told The Daily Wire.

Breaking News. Spirit-Filled Stories. Subscribe to Charisma on YouTube now!

You would think that FEMA confirming this awful report would be the worst thing to come out of this dereliction of duty.

You would think wrong.

Because when Marn'i Washington, the FEMA official at the heart of this swirling controversy, finally had her chance to tell her side of this story, it only made things much, much worse for the government.

Appearing on Monday's episode of "Roland Martin Unfiltered," Washington spoke at length with the eponymous host of the show.

You can watch the whole thing for yourself below: