

Exorcist Warns Celine Dion's Gender-Neutral Clothing Line Is 'Demonic'

A Pennsylvania-based priest and exorcist has claimed singer Celine Dion's new gender-neutral clothing line is "demonic." The "My Heart Will Go On" singer launched her controversial collection, CELINUNUNU, earlier this month, prompting a wildly mixed reaction online.

Most of the flak, however, was directed at Dion's bizarre launch commercial for the brand, in which she can be seen being chased through a neonatal ward by police. "Our children—they are not really our children, as we are all just links in a never-ending chain that is life," she declared in the highly disturbing advert.

"For us," she continued, "they are everything. But in reality, we are only a fraction of their universe. We miss the past; they dream of tomorrow." The signer then blows black glitter into the air, magically changing the babies' pink and blue outfits to black and white, gender-neutral clothes. {eo}
