

FEMA Supervisor Against Trump Flags Relieved of Duty

FEMA official Marn'i Washington who ordered her staff to avoid helping homes with Donald Trump flags affected by hurricanes in Florida has been relieved of her duty.

Internal correspondence exclusively obtained by The Daily Wire suggests FEMA discriminated against Trump supporters. Several people familiar with the matter told the outlet that a FEMA supervisor told workers to "avoid homes advertising Trump."

FEMA bypassed at least 20 homes.

"I know they're short-staffed, I thought we could go help and make a difference," one of the employees told The Daily Wire. "When we got there we were told to discriminate against people. It's almost unbelievable to think that somebody in the federal government would think that's okay."

It remains unknown whether this guidance applied to FEMA's response in other areas devastated by hurricanes.

A FEMA spokesperson later told the outlet, in part, that it believes the situation was an “isolated incident” and has “taken measures to remove the employee from their role and are investigating the matter to prevent this from happening ever again.”

FEMA has since let her go.

JUST IN: A FEMA supervisor who instructed disaster relief officials to avoid homes and not help Americans who showed support for Trump has been relieved of duties, according to an official statement.

“While we believe this is an isolated incident, we have taken measures to remove the employee from their role and are investigating the matter to prevent this from happening ever again. The employee who issued this guidance had no authority and was given no direction to tell teams to avoid these homes and we are reaching out to the people who may have not been reached as a result of this incident,” a FEMA spokesperson said.
