

‘Fixer Upper’ Makes a Comeback; ‘We Weren’t Done,’ Say Chip and Joanna Gaines

Home renovation stars Chip and Joanna Gaines have announced that their hit show Fixer Upper will return to television in 2021.

“We will be filming another season of Fixer Upper to air on Magnolia Network when it launches next year,” Chip wrote in a statement.

The Gaines, both devout Christians, say they felt like a “chapter closed” after filming the season finale but there was still work to be done.

“We knew we weren’t done dreaming about ways to make old things new again,” Chip wrote. “This past year, we have poured our hearts into content and programming for Magnolia Network. Searching for stories we believe the world needs to hear.”

According to the couple, the reboot will bear some changes, but viewers will feel like the show starts right where it left off.

“In a lot of ways, the show is going to pick up right where it left off,” the statement reads. “These years in between have taught us a lot about ourselves and how we operate best, so we’re likely to do a few things a little differently this time around.”
