

Franklin Graham Gives McDonald's 'Free Advice' on How to 'Bring Happy Customers Back'

Few would dispute that Franklin Graham is one of the premier evangelical Christian voices in the world today.

Nobody would deny that Graham is quite knowledgeable when it comes to matters of the cross.

Well, it turns out that the founder of Samaritan's Purse is also quite knowledgeable when it comes to a rather different, ubiquitous symbol – those golden arches.

In a post that's probably not as faith-focused as his usual theological fare, Graham took a few moments out of his busy schedule to be a good Samaritan – pun intended – to worldwide fast food chain McDonald's.

Because it turns out that the 73-year-old Graham is quite a fan of McDonald's – it's something he actually regularly posts about – and was willing to offer some “free advice” for the fast food conglomerate.
