

Greg Laurie: Pray ‘Jesus Revolution’ Impacts Millions More on Netflix

The faith-based film “Jesus Revolution” is coming to Netflix on July 31, allowing thousands more movie watchers the opportunity to hear the gospel message.

Pastor Greg Laurie, whose life the film is based on, urged his social media followers to pray for those who would be watching the film on the streaming platform.

“Let’s all be praying that God uses it to touch lives,” he tweeted.

As CBN News has reported, the movie tells the true story behind the Jesus Movement of the late 1960s and ’70s, including how Pastor Chuck Smith welcomed hippies at Calvary Chapel as they were looking for truth. That invitation helped to fuel one of the greatest spiritual awakenings in American history.

The film was released by Lionsgate in February and earned more than $52 million in theaters. It opened at the box office at the No. 3 spot and remained in the top 10 for several weeks.

In April, it soared to No. 1 on Amazon Prime’s bestseller chart and hit the No. 1 spot on Blu-ray and DVD charts as well.

Greg and his wife, Cathe Laurie, were two of those young people who were welcomed by Chuck Smith. They were seekers who soon became part of the Jesus Movement and eventually went on to pastor Harvest Christian Fellowship.

On July 8, Laurie will host a Jesus-Revolution baptism inspired by what took place a half-century ago at Pirate's Cove Beach.

The event had been initially planned for July 9 but had to be moved to July 8, this Saturday, after an overwhelming response from people wanting to be baptized.

Pastor Greg Laurie shared on social media, "The immense response from individuals desiring to be baptized is genuinely remarkable! It's a clear testament to the revival that is happening in individual hearts and minds and the profound impact of the Jesus Revolution film."
