

Heinous Law Allows Parents to Transition Their Infants

A dangerous law is taking gender identity to the max.

In the middle of April, the German Parliament decided to pass the "Self-Determination Act" or the SBGG.

As Reduxx Magazine noted, this bill "establishes 'gender identity' as a protected characteristic and allows parents to change the sex marker on their children's documents from birth."

With this piece of legislation, young teenagers will be able to change their legal identities.

As the AP reported, "The new rules allow minors 14 years and older to change their name and legal gender with approval from their parents or guardians."

If the family does not agree to the child's wishes to transition, it is possible for the child to request for the court to overrule their family's decision.

Justice Minister Marco Buschman believes that at the end of the day parents will ask themselves "What is the best thing for my child?" He also supports the bill because he believes that those who identify as transgender are currently uncomfortable with society's questioning of their lifestyle and choices.

"Those affected have found this questioning very degrading," Buschmann said.
