

Hollywood Actress' Connection With God, Captivating On-Set Encounter With Holy Spirit

Actress Nika King, who plays a pastor's wife in "Sound of Hope: The Story of Possum Trot," is helping bring to light the movie's powerful, real-life story about adoption and foster care.

But King's personal connection to the issue and her role in portraying Donna Martin, wife of Bishop W.C. Martin, is truly a story only God could write. See, King's character, Martin, is a preacher's wife who inspired 22 families in her church to adopt 77 of the most difficult-to-place children.

As it turns out, King's own mother's story is strikingly similar to the events depicted in "Sound of Hope: The Story of Possum Trot."

"It's my mom's story," King told CBN News of the movie. "She was fostered by a pastor and his wife. And I knew I had to be in this film some kind of way."

Feeling the Holy Spirit

King said she felt the Holy Spirit while filming scenes—and experienced an unparalleled on-set dynamic.

"It was so captivating because there were times and scenes where the Spirit was ... in the room, and they would yell, 'Cut!' and I'm like, 'You can't cut on this!'" she said. "This is the spirit of God moving, not only in our performances, in our words, and in our thoughts, and in the messaging, because this film is meant to really fix this problem that we have in this country, with 400,000 kids being in foster care.”
