In a video by Faith Director Jenny Korn, she shared what this event entailed.

“We’re going to be celebrating through worship and prayer and remarks here from the president, so we’re so excited we’re going to be doing this to honor Holy Week and to honor our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ,” Korn stated.

She noted that a hundred faith leaders from around the nation were invited to this special event.

Pastor Greg Laurie attended, sharing photos on Facebook with Secretary of State Marco Rubio and Rev. Franklin Graham, writing:

It was an honor to attend a special Easter lunch at the White House. @realdonaldtrump spoke to us, and it was great catching up with old friends. We even got to see @marcorubio and his lovely wife, Jannette.

Among those there included Pastor Greg Locke, who wrote on X :

Thank you Lord for a beautiful Faith Leaders gathering at the White House. Amazing to hear our President @realDonaldTrump talk so freely and openly about the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Ministers Jenny and Stephen Weaver also shared about their visit to the White House, with Weaver posting a video on Facebook, writing:

White House Ready! From living on the streets to walking around the White House.. Only God! Spent yesterday and today walking through DC prophesying and declaring the Word of God and releasing prayers of freedom and deliverance through the beautiful White House today.. SO SURREAL

Mercy Culture senior pastor Landon Schott described the event:

It's always an honor to be invited to the White House, especially on Holy week of Easter!

To hear the President share the story of the resurrection was special. He declared, “America needs more faith and will be rededicated as one nation under God!”

One of the most meaningful moments for me was a spontaneous conversation with the Vice President. I got to share that at the beginning of this year I fasted 40 days for him and his family praying for protection wisdom and a real encounter with God.

Being in a room with national and world leaders worshiping praying in the Spirit and contending for our country was beautiful. There was reverence there was unity and there was a genuine desire to honor Jesus during Holy Week. Seeing the presidents cabinet come together in that setting was really cool.

As Schott put it, “God is not done with America.”

Donné Clement Petruska, who is the daughter of the late prophetic voice, Kim Clement, also attended the event.

Back at the White House today! Make sure you keep an eye on @prophetkim we are about to load video of what happened at the White House on Analysis and my behind the scenes footage for our Vault Partners will be up too. @petrowashere

She also shared that her husband was among those outside to see a rainbow over the White House. Could this potentially be a prophetic sign that God is working things out for America?

My husband was outside and saw this! @petrowashere

As worship echoed through the halls of power and the name of Jesus was lifted high in the nation’s capital, the moment served as more than just a gathering—it was a reminder that God is not finished with America.

From prayers over leadership to songs declaring the power of the cross, this Holy Week event pointed to a deeper truth: when a nation turns its attention back to the Lord, even in small ways, heaven takes notice.
