

How to Encourage a Move of the Holy Spirit in a Dry Church

This past weekend I spoke at a men's conference in Rwentobo, Uganda. Most of the men were Anglicans, including an archbishop from Rwanda and a bishop from Kenya. But these were not your grandmother's Anglicans.

These men danced in the aisles, shouted their praises and spoke in tongues. Even the bishops with clerical collars talked about healing the sick and casting out demons. In Africa, Christians aren't embarrassed to talk about the Holy Spirit.

If your church allows this kind of freedom, you are blessed—because many American pastors today are afraid to allow the Spirit to move. We've put Him in a box. We have a long list of seeker-friendly rules these days, telling us that American churchgoers only want a 60-minute church experience; we also assume that altar calls will scare people away.

I wish we would stop being so worried about how the Holy Spirit might show up in church. People need the reality of God's power! If your church is suffering from dry worship, dry sermons and dry prayers, here are seven practical things we can do to encourage the freedom of the Spirit:

Get your FREE CHARISMA NEWSLETTERS today! Stay up to date with current issues, Holy Spirit news, Christian teachings, Charisma videos & more!

Teach about the Holy Spirit often. The Holy Spirit was rarely mentioned in the church I grew up in, so we never expected Him to do anything. Yet He is described in the second verse of the Bible as “moving” upon the surface of creation (Gen. 1:2), and

He has one of the last messages in the Bible (see Rev. 22:17). He moves and He speaks throughout the Scriptures. But we must invite the Spirit to move and speak in our churches by giving Him the place He deserves. Don't minimize His role.

Leave time for altar ministry. A church without altar ministry is like a hospital without a maternity ward. New life often begins at the altar—whether it is salvation, healing or prayer for a fresh anointing. Today many churches that offer multiple services often skimp on ministry time because they need to rush the 10 a.m. group out of the sanctuary to get ready for the next crowd. Multiple services are fine, but we are crowding the Spirit out of the church if we don't schedule time for people to respond to the message.

Host small groups where people can use the Holy Spirit's gifts. It's not practical for everyone to prophesy or exercise other spiritual gifts in a large congregation. But if people are plugged into small groups, there will be opportunities to encourage one another in supernatural ways. And people are more comfortable stepping out in faith in front of 10 people than they are in front of 3,000.

Train people in spiritual gifts. Many pastors clamp down on spiritual gifts because a few fanatics have tried to pull the church into weirdness. But in our efforts to protect the sheep from "charismania," let's not swing the pendulum to the other extreme by forbidding the gifts. The power of God will flow if we teach people the difference between authentic anointing and strange fire.

Breaking News. Spirit-Filled Stories. Subscribe to Charisma on YouTube now!

Offer "teaching moments" to explain spiritual gifts. I've been in churches where people prophesied in such a harsh, condemning tone that everyone in the church let out a collective groan. Their "words from God" had the same effect as fingernails on a chalkboard. We can't ignore these awkward moments. When the Corinthians mishandled speaking in tongues and prophecy, the apostle Paul used their mistakes to teach about how to use gifts properly.

Expose your church to ministries that flow in the anointing.

God not only gave the church pastors—He also gave evangelists, teachers, prophets and apostles (see Eph. 4:11). Yet many churches today know only pastors. We need life-giving traveling ministries because God sends them to win new converts, heal the sick, unleash prophetic power, train leaders and impart new vision in congregations. We shouldn't be afraid to open our pulpits to the other people God uses to bless the church.

Give time for testimonies. Nothing raises the faith level of a congregation like someone's raw experience with God. If a man was healed this week in your church, let him tell about it. If an infertile couple got pregnant, let them shout it from the housetops. Stories of supernatural intervention trigger a holy expectation in everyone.

1 Thessalonians 5:19 (NASB) says it plainly: "Do not quench the Spirit." Let's fling open the doors and allow the Spirit to have His way. Instead of being afraid of what He might disrupt, or whom He might offend, let's care more about what the church would be like without Him.{eoa}

Join Charisma Magazine Online to follow everything the Holy Spirit is doing around the world!