

‘I’m In Love With a Church Girl’ Encourages Shared Christian Belief Among Couples

I’m In Love With A Church Girl is a faith-based drama with a few laughs.

The movie stars rapper Jeff ‘Ja Rule’ Atkins as Miles Montego, a former drug dealer who’s living the high life with plenty of money to spare. Though he’s now a legitimate businessman trying to turn his life around, the DEA is keeping a close eye on him. Jason McDaniels, played by Stephen Baldwin, surveils Miles and his friends, looking for a crime to pin on him.

During this time, Miles meets Adrienne Bailon’s character, Vanessa, at a friend’s party. Their relationship progresses, but Vanessa, a model church girl, tells Miles that, to be “equally yoked” (see 2 Corinthians 6:14) together, he’ll have to consider becoming a Christian. As Miles begins visiting church and reading the Bible Vanessa gave to him, he starts to wonder whether a person with his past could truly change and whether God would forgive all his failures.

With her parents’ permission, Miles proposes to Vanessa and she accepts. But a tragedy strikes that will provide the ultimate test for Miles’ new faith.

Overall, I’m In Love With A Church Girl has a heartfelt Christian message that many will enjoy. A light caution is advised for some brief foul language and one scene of violence.

For the full movie review and others like it, visit the Movieguide website.