

Is Bigfoot Tied to the Nephilim?

For years, people have wondered: Is Bigfoot real? What about UFOs? Or the Nephilim?

In a recent video, Nephilim expert L.A. Marzulli shared a story from a woman named Jill who is searching for answers about a strange, supernatural occurrence her great-grandmother described about visiting an Indian reservation.

"She was a small child around the late 1890s," Jill writes. "She would go to the Nez Perce Indian reservation with her dad...[she] would play with the other children, but the one thing they were not allowed to do was to go to a certain section down by the river. I asked her why. She would always reply that it was because a family of Bigfoot lived there. If they caught anyone coming into their area they would eat them. It was a matter-of-fact knowledge that no one would go to that area."

Jill's letter also talked about meeting another woman who said it was common knowledge in the reservation to stay away from the mountains or risk being eaten by these strange beings. She then proposed the question to Marzulli as to whether or not he's ever heard of a Bigfoot species having families.

"The sightings have gone up exponentially," Marzulli says. "If you really look at what's going on, the sightings have gone up exponentially in the last 50 or 60 years, no doubt about it."

Marzulli then described his own bizarre experience on the border of New Hampshire and Massachusetts with Fritz Zimmerman, a camera woman and his wife. In this place, there were miles of rock walls that were mysteriously built with the forest growing up all around them. As the group was heading up the trail, Marzulli saw something unforgettable.

"In front of the trail was a six-inch sapling which [had] been broken about three feet up. Broken and twisted. So, someone took it and twisted it," Marzulli says.

He pointed out the impossibility for a normal human being to do such an act.

Speaking at a church on the Navajo Reservation, Marzulli also says a woman told him how the people there avoid a section of the river because it is known for being the home to Bigfoot. She pointed to a mountain behind the church where a UFO had appeared as well.

While many people may be skeptical of beings like Bigfoot, UFOs and the Nephilim, we must remember that the spiritual realm is real, and there is a real enemy who wants to attack in a variety of ways. However, no matter what beings are roaming this earth with us there is ultimately no power greater than the power of Christ.
