

Jordan Peterson Offers Hopeful Health Update: 'Thank God'

Dr. Jordan B. Peterson is giving a positive update following a long and tumultuous battle with his health.

In a post on X, Peterson noted that he has been doing some writing again.

My activities are still very limited at the moment. I have been doing some writing, however—thank God. I'm so relieved to be once again doing something creative and useful.

Peterson also noted that he has been watching teachings on the darkness of Marxism before pointing out the evil behind Zohran Mamdani's ideology.

*I have also been watching Professor Paul Kengor's The Dark Side of Marxism from @petersonacademy.*

It does not feature the Marx portrayed by the woke university socialist acolytes (to put it mildly).

I interviewed @DrPaulKengor a year ago or so ago on my podcast. He's a truly engaging, creative and witty storyteller and lecturer.

It turns out that Old Karl was quite the satanic soul.

He was a parasite economically all his life, extorting continual support from his long-suffering relatives. He wrote (and admired) purposefully demonic poetry and drama.

Most disturbing, however, was his choice of favorite quote. From Goethe's Faust, it's a line I have quoted many times, in consequence of its sheer existential horror.

It's Mephistopheles presenting his identity and central credo:

"I am the Spirit that endlessly denies! And rightly, too; for all that comes to birth Is fit for overthrow, as nothing worth; Wherefore the world were better sterilized; Thus all that's here as Evil recognized Is gain to me, and downfall, ruin, sin. The very element I prosper in."

I wonder if Zohran Mamdani @NYCMayor knows of the inclination of his apparent intellectual hero?

My activities are still very limited at the moment. I have been doing some writing, however—thank God.

As Peterson continues to heal, lift him and his entire family in prayer against all the spiritual attacks of the enemy that they have been encountering.
