

Kirk Cameron and Sean Feucht Standing Up to Worldly Influence Over Our Children

When two kingdom giants like Sean Feucht and Kirk Cameron unite for the gospel, the enemy is sure to be in big trouble.

Feucht, an evangelist, worship leader and founder of Let Us Worship and Hold the Line, will team up with Cameron on his book tour for “Brave Story Hour” on Saturday at Cherry Hill Public Library in Cherry Hill, New Jersey. Feucht will lead attendees in the national anthem and worship prior to the event.

Both Cameron and Feucht, in their own ministries, have been diligently working to destroy the woke ideals that have decimated the country in recent years.

“I think all of us across America, especially believers, should be alarmed at the purposeful and deliberate indoctrination and grooming of our kids through these perverted ideologies and sexualization of everything,” Feucht tells Charisma News’ John Matarazzo in a recent interview. “But it’s happening not just on TV shows and it’s not happening just in movies. It’s actually happening in public libraries. And these are places that are taxpayer-funded, places that are turning into indoctrination camps where they’re having Drag Queen Story Hour and crazy stuff like that.

“It’s easy for Christians to whine and complain and get frustrated, and they should, but it’s a whole other thing to say, hey, we’re going to provide an alternative and we’re going to fight back,” Feucht says. “So that’s what we’re doing this Saturday. We’re going to bring worship, and we’re going to bring gospel proclamation. Kirk’s going to share stories about the gospel of Jesus, and we're going to bring prayer and essentially light up a very dark place."

In a piece he wrote for Fox News, Cameron says he has spent the past five months speaking with families and children across America at public libraries, sharing his beliefs about faith, family and country.

"When I speak to these people, I share the timeless value of biblical wisdom and the 'Fruit of the Spirit' with children and their parents," he wrote. "I warm the room, shine the light by reading stories to spellbound audiences from my new book, 'As You Grow.'

"I've been visiting these same public libraries—those that are willing to host me—and other venues doing my own story hour together with Brave Books. Families have been pouring into my events by the hundreds, even the thousands."

And with both Cameron and Feucht as headliners, you can believe families will do the same this weekend in Cherry Hill, New Jersey. {eo}

Shawn A. Akers is the online editor at Charisma News.