

Larry Tomczak's Week in Review: Fuel for the Front Line in a Frightening Time

(Facebook: The White House)

"These are the times that try men's souls." These famous words from patriot Thomas Paine were spoken during the American Revolution. With what's escalating all around us, this certainly describes our serious situation today.

We are shocked to see a massive LGBTQ pride event on the White House lawn, where Old Glory is displayed next to the new gay pride/transgender flag while topless trans men and women shamefully pose.

For the first time in our history, a president is indicted on 37 felony counts, drawing upon a 106-year-old Espionage Act, while Hillary Clinton's, Hunter Biden's and President Joe Biden's activities are basically ignored. If only one count brings conviction, Donald Trump would be sentenced to die in prison, since each carries a 20-year sentence.

The border catastrophe continues under the subterfuge of now allowing asylum seekers a clever way to gain entrance through website work, bringing in masses contrary to our established immigration laws.

What's happening to our beloved country? Division and hatred intensify, and there seems to be no way out apart from divine intervention.

To stay strong on the front line in this fight, we all need fresh fuel for the fire to stay strong.
