

Larry Tomczak's Week in Review: Godly Ways to Guide on Gender Issues

The Paris Olympics have ended, and it was not only the gold medalists who gained attention worldwide, but also the controversial topic of gender.

Angela Carini, a female police officer from Italy, threw in the towel after an Olympic boxer with elevated testosterone levels and XY chromosomes landed two punches; Carini went to her knees, crying as her dreams were dashed. Her comment: "I've never been hit so hard in all my life!"

The opening ceremony launched with a perverse, bizarre and profane mockery of the Last Supper, a sacred event in Christendom throughout the centuries. Jill Biden commented that the opening ceremony was "spectacular!" while millions of Christ-followers across the globe protested in disbelief at what they had just seen.

This edition of "Week in Review" begins a series leading up to the election where you will have the opportunity, free and on demand, to watch brief equipping videos on controversial themes like these by some of America's top Christian leaders.
