

Leaked UFO Documents Suggest Secret UFO Programs Connected to Same Site as Missing Scientists

A newly revealed collection of alleged government documents is stirring debate over unidentified aerial phenomena and what officials may—or may not—be disclosing.

According to the New York Post, the materials featured in the upcoming documentary, “Sleeping Dog,” include internal memos, technical illustrations and photographs that reportedly point to long-running U.S. interest in UFO-related research.

Filmmaker Jeremy Corbell said the files were obtained from the son of a former cybersecurity chief connected to Los Alamos National Laboratory. The lab has historically played a central role in classified scientific work, making the alleged connection especially notable.

To order L.A. Marzulli's book, Rungs of Disclosure, visit .

While the authenticity of the documents has not been independently confirmed, their contents have already fueled intense public interest.

Claims of High-Level Involvement

The New York Post reports that one document references a 1991 briefing involving officials from multiple U.S. agencies, including intelligence and military branches. The discussion allegedly centered on well-documented UFO sightings from the late 20th century, including incidents in Florida and across Belgium.

The same materials suggest that research may also be connected to academic partnerships with institutions such as MIT and Stanford. Right now, no government agency has verified these claims.

Disappearances Deepen the Mystery

Adding another layer of concern are the unresolved disappearances of individuals reportedly tied to the same research environment, including Anthony Chavez, an engineer who vanished in May 2025, and Melissa Casias, who went missing weeks later. Casias' husband was also reportedly seen, on surveillance footage, walking on the highway by himself.

A Spiritual Wake-Up Call in an Age of Disclosure

Beyond the headlines, the growing fascination with UFOs and hidden knowledge raises deeper spiritual questions. Scripture repeatedly warns that the last days will be marked by widespread deception, confusion and powerful false narratives.

In Matthew 24, Jesus warned that deceptive signs would emerge, capable of misleading many. As discussions around "disclosure" gain traction in mainstream culture, Christians are increasingly challenged to discern truth from distraction.

As mysteries unfold, one certainty remains: God's truth is not hidden, and in the end, every secret will be brought into the light.

Abby Trivett is a writer and editor for Charisma Media and has a passion for sharing the gospel through the written word. She holds two degrees from Regent University, a B.A. in Communication with a concentration in Journalism and a Master of Arts in Journalism. She is the author of the upcoming book, The Power of Suddenly: Discover How God Can Change Everything in a Moment. For interviews and media inquiries, please contact media@.