

Missed UFO Disclosure Deadline Sparks Growing Public Suspicion

Questions surrounding government transparency on unidentified aerial phenomena (UAPs) are intensifying after a key Pentagon deadline quietly passed—without clear confirmation that lawmakers received what they were promised.

According to a report from Newsweek, the Department of Defense had been expected to turn over more than 40 classified UFO-related videos to Congress by April 14, 2026. That request was led by Rep. Anna Paulina Luna, part of a broader push for transparency regarding encounters with mysterious objects observed in sensitive military zones.

Yet as the deadline passed, many now have more questions than answers.

Cover-Up Claims Intensify Amid Secrecy

Meanwhile, a separate Daily Mail report has amplified concerns that the government may be deliberately limiting public access to UFO-related information.

The outlet reported that the Pentagon has acknowledged the existence of additional unreleased UFO videos, while continuing to cite national security concerns as justification for keeping them classified.

According to the report, Luna wrote a letter to Secretary of War Pete Hegseth, asking for the release of these files by the 14th, some of which are said to have caught glimpses of these UAPs in both Syria and Iran.

Luna reportedly stated on social media that “No one from the Pentagon had responded until we reached out, and it appears that someone did not pass the letter to the appropriate authorities,” calling this move “convenient.”

Deception, Disclosure and the Days Ahead

As conversations around UFOs and unexplained phenomena accelerate, many believers are watching these developments through a different lens—one rooted not just in national security, but in spiritual discernment.

Scripture warns of a time when deception would increase, and truth would become harder to discern (see Matt. 24:4–5). What we are seeing right here with these UFO files is a reminder that there will come a time when deception plagues our world on an even greater level, and not all will be prepared for it.

Christians must stay grounded—not in speculation, but in the unchanging Word of God. As headlines continue to shift and new information emerges, discernment will be essential.
