2 Kim Clement Prophecies Addressing America's Economic Woes

The U.S. stock markets are experiencing significant declines, causing concern among investors nationwide. For some, this downturn appears sudden and unpredictable, but others believe it was foretold years ago. The late Christian prophet Kim Clement spoke of such an event as far back as 2005. As the nation grapples with the current financial crisis, Clement's words are gaining renewed attention, prompting many to consider the possible spiritual dimensions of these economic challenges.

Here are the words Clement spoke specifically about banking and the stock exchange during the months of August, September and October:

A miracle shall happen in the banking and the stock exchange. Look to the months of August, September and October. Watch the oil, for God says it's gone hi hi hi, lower lower lower, but God says He's playing a yo-yo game with you.

... God said it's gonna change. It'll change because Greenspan shall go, for God says there is something different that shall come in its place, and there will be an economic revival for this nation and you will not need the Middle East. You will not need the oil, you will not need them, for God says it shall be in the soil of this nation.

The Wheels Have Started to Come Off the US Economy, the Worst Is Yet to Come

For a long time, there was a lot of denial about the direction that the U.S. economy was heading. The Biden administration and the mainstream media just kept insisting that everything was just fine even though everyone could clearly see that it wasn't. But now reality is setting in.

Last week we got some numbers that Wall Street really didn't like, and a massive temper tantrum ensued. The panic that we witnessed on Friday was quite breathtaking, and many are concerned that it could bleed over into the new week. Investors are desperate for the Federal Reserve to cut interest rates, but so far the Fed has not moved.

On Friday, many were surprised when the employment numbers were much worse than anticipated.

Former Miss USA's Warning: 'You'll Sign Your Soul to the Devil'

A former Miss USA is advising pageant competitors against taking the crown.

Recently, the Miss USA organization has been dealing with issues after both Miss USA and Teen Miss USA stepped down from their titleholder duties.

As Fox News reported, Miss USA Noelia Voigt and UmaSofia Srivastava, Miss Teen USA, both walked away from their crowns in May. This led to first-runner up, Savannah Gankiewicz of Hawaii, to take over as Miss USA for the remainder of the pageant year.
