The story behind Mica Miller's recent death is a tragic one, and resulted in a life lost far too soon.

Amid the wave of theories, speculations and accusations levelled against her husband, Pastor John-Paul Miller of Solid Rock at Market Common in Myrtle Beach, South Carolina, Miller's behavior can be described as erratic at best.

While the couple was in the process of separating, Mica Miller had filed for three "separate support and maintenance" requests within the last year. John-Paul still delivered a eulogy during a May 5 memorial service.

How Can God Use Ministers Living in Sin?

It's a question many of us have wondered: how can God use ministers who are living in sin? It seems as though everyday we see ministers of the gospel sharing about some type of controversy they've been a part of, including affairs, scams and other debacles. At the same time, it appears that God still uses these same men and women who have been living in outright sin to do good works. How can this be so?

Is it possible for ministers who have fallen into sin to truly be used for healing, deliverance and the spreading of the gospel?

In one of his latest livestreams, Vlad Savchuk answered this very question about how God continues to use those who have fallen wayside from His glory.

‘Summer of Baptisms’ Sees Thousands Gather for Worship

Florida’s beaches, the California coastline, the Texas Gulf and rivers in the Midwest have become the epicenters for a massive baptism movement that kicked off across the country this weekend.

On Saturday, thousands joined revivalist and Core Group leader Jenny Weaver on the shores of Siesta Key Beach in Sarasota, Florida, to praise and worship Jesus Christ during the “Summer of Baptisms” event.

As CBN News reported, Weaver had asked members of her Core Group ministry to simultaneously host baptisms in Louisiana, Tennessee, California, Texas and Missouri.
