

Spiritually Inspiring Films

✖ At a recent summit Ted Baehr and Christian film makers discuss the rewards of making faith-based movies.

Making spiritually uplifting, religious, faith-based movies and television programs with inspiring content and messages can be a professionally and personally rewarding job.

That's the conclusion of a panel discussion, "Making, Distributing and Promoting Spiritually Uplifting Family Movies and Television Programs," held Friday at the InkTip Pitch & Networking Summit in Burbank, Calif.

Moderated by Radio and Website Manager Jeff Holder of Movieguide, which sponsored the event, the panelists gave a standing room only group of aspiring scriptwriters and producers a unique opportunity to hear from a panel of accomplished screenwriters and producers about what it takes to make spiritually uplifting, redemptive, faith-based movies and TV programs.
