

'My Jesus' Singer Calls Christians to Pray After Assassination Attempt on Trump

Shock, horror and disbelief have dominated emotions in the wake of the attempted assassination against former President Donald Trump.

While social media and news outlets continue to analyze the details surrounding what unfolded, some celebrities and commentators are speaking sanity and hope into the tragic scenario.

Among them: Christian singer Anne Wilson, a performer who typically doesn't speak about politics and feels it's not her "place" to do so.

But the attempted assassination compelled Wilson to deliver a powerful proclamation to her fans – one that led her to passionately speak about the need for humility and prayer.

"I have my platform to focus on the hope of Jesus and leading others to HIM through music," Wilson wrote on Instagram. "However, sometimes there are moments that call for speaking out. The tragedy that took place this weekend was one of those moments."

Wilson said she was "shocked, heartbroken, disturbed and angry” after hearing about the attempted assassination and “felt hopeless” as she pondered the state of the world.

“What happened this weekend was despicable,” she continued. “It is pure evil. No president should ever be in that situation. My pastor said it best in yesterday’s sermon, ‘politics are secondary to our relationship with God.’ No matter what your political beliefs are, as Christians we are called to pray in situations like this.”
