

New Invention Helps Believers Fight Back Against Cancel Culture

With the dramatic rise in cancel culture, believers are being attacked from all sides, from banking to school to just walking down the street.

“Just take a look around you,” says one expert. “Look up in a store, on the street, on the highway and just about anywhere, and you will be shocked to find tiny cameras everywhere—they are ubiquitous and literally watching your every move.”

With the advance of technology and the internet, tiny cameras everywhere can be linked to databases and process all our faces in real time.

While most of us don't worry as we think it would be impossible to check video for our faces, today's technology is completely different. Nobody looks at video, instead, your face is instantly processed into a massive database and matched with a picture on file from your driver's license application or another picture taken for instant recognition. When the various databases are connected, the authorities know everything you are doing, going from camera to camera with real-time data of what you do every day, combined with your cellphone information to not only watch but listen to you as well.

However, God has moved many to use the same developments in technology to fight back. Bitcoin has advanced, helping those whose banking has been shut down. And now, an amazing type of special glasses called Reflectacles has been created, termed “privacy eyewear,” to protect you from the ever-present cameras' prying eyes.

Simply put, Reflectacles are specifically designed to confuse the cameras so they cannot use facial recognition to read your face with a number of different systems ranging from the “Phantom,” which blocks all infrared technology, to the “Ghost,” which blocks not only infrared cameras but the newer 2D and 3D facial recognition technologies.

According to the inventor, who prefers to remain anonymous, the Reflectacle series is designed to return privacy to the individual and to allow personal freedom. “Facial recognition is now very accurate,” he says. “As technology improves, it will continue to blur the lines of what, where, how and why these systems are being used all around us without our consent.”

“Legislation will always be behind,” he adds. “For this reason I have created Reflectacles, to allow you to opt out right now. I hope they help!”

Stephen Strang, bestselling author of God and Cancel Culture, asks in God, Trump and the 2020 Election, “What about the attacks on Christianity either by censorship or hate speech laws that violate our constitutional rights of free speech and religious liberty?” His words echo those of Paul in Galatians 5:1, “For freedom Christ freed us. Stand fast therefore and do not be entangled again with the yoke of bondage.”

In a day and age when privacy has not only been lost, but our very lives are being exploited and the power of the government weaponized against believers, Reflectacles are an easy way to fight back and regain our personal freedom in Christ. {eo}
