

Oklahoma Attorney General Urges Employers to Stand Their Lawful Ground

With thousands of employees at risk of losing their jobs and facing pressure from the Biden administration to surrender to forced vaccines, Oklahoma Gov. Kevin Stitt and Attorney General John O'Connor have formed a united front to push back against the Biden administration's fear tactics and oppressive executive order.

It is important employers and employees realize that at this time the executive order only affects federal employees and contractors.

"There are currently no rules that require employers to mandate the COVID-19 vaccine for employees," O'Connor said in his statement. "I urge Oklahoma employers to disregard the Biden administration's wishes to the contrary. In the event federal emergency rules are issued that place such an unlawful demand upon employers, our office will be joined by other state attorneys general across the country to quickly sue and seek an injunction against any implementation or enforcement.

"Oklahomans should have the right to make their own personal health decisions for themselves and their families. Employers that are mandating vaccines are unfortunately doing so upon their own initiative. Religious, medical, and personal exemptions should be uniformly approved by those employers at the very least," stated O'Connor.

"Each Oklahoman should be considered individually. Some have medical, some have religious, and some have other personal reasons why they do not believe the vaccine is healthy for them. These personal decisions must be respected and protected from government intrusion," concluded O'Connor.

We need to pray for Gov. Stitt and Attorney General John O'Connor as they have courageously taken this stand against federal overreach. We need to also pray for other freedom-loving/freedom-preserving governors and attorneys general to follow suit and join this fight to stand up for the citizens of their states. Together may they all link arms to form a wall of protection against this injustice.

Lord, we thank you for the courage of these two men and for other governors and attorney generals who have joined the fight to boldly stand up for the citizens of their states. We pray for physical protection for them and their families. We also pray for wisdom and ongoing courage as they battle against the injustices that are coming against American citizens on a daily basis. Father, we ask you to empower them and strengthen them. Even the widow woman received justice from the unjust judge, how much more shall your children receive justice from You when we cry out to You. {eo}
