

Oscars Expose Spiritual Divide: Life, Loss and the Battle for Hollywood's Soul

In a moment that has stirred both cultural and spiritual conversation, two Oscar speeches—years apart—are now being viewed not just as personal expressions, but as reflections of deeper ideological currents that many believe have long influenced Hollywood.

For decades, some have pointed to the entertainment industry's historical ties to elite circles, symbolism, and even alleged connections to Freemasonry—a system often associated with ritual, Enlightenment ideology, and the elevation of human will. Even the design of the 2025 Oscar award show mimicked the Freemasonry symbol, and the Oscar award itself bears a likeness to Sokar, the ancient Egyptian god.

A few years ago, this paganism was celebrated perhaps in the most astonishing way when actress Michelle Williams made headlines for crediting her success in part to her abortion. Holding her award, she stated, “I wouldn't have been able to do this without employing a woman's right to choose.” This depravity echoed something deeper: a system that celebrates literal human sacrifice for personal gain.

To order Chad MacDonald's new book, Defeating Darkness, visit
.

However, if we fast forward to this year, and a very different message emerged.

In a video shared by commentator Benny Johnson, Actress Jessie Buckley took the stage and delivered a speech that stood in stark contrast to Williams' speech. She honored family, motherhood and love. Turning to her husband, she said, “You’re the most incredible dad. You’re my best friend, and I want to have 20,000 more babies with you.” Speaking of her child, she added, “I love you, and I love being your mom, and I can’t wait to discover life beside you.”

Buckley went on to describe motherhood as “the greatest collision of my life,” ultimately dedicating her award “to the beautiful chaos of a mother’s heart.”

This wasn’t just a touching moment—it was a disruption.

As Hollywood has long operated under systems that elevate self, power and achievement at any cost, while Buckley’s words represented something radically different. Instead of self-exaltation, she pointed to self-giving. Instead of sacrifice for success, she celebrated life as the reward itself.

Scripture reminds us that “children are a heritage from the Lord” (Ps. 127:3), and that true legacy is not built on accolades, but on what we cultivate in the generations to come. In that sense, Buckley’s words aligned more closely with a biblical worldview than what many have come to expect from Hollywood’s biggest stage.

So the question remains: what are we really witnessing?

Is this simply a difference of personal opinion—or are we seeing a deeper clash of kingdoms?

In a culture often accused of glorifying self, a voice that honors life, family and sacrificial love stands out like a light in the darkness. It is this very light that Hollywood needs more of.

To watch Benny Johnson’s full video, click here. (Editor’s note: Mild language).

Abby Trivett is a writer and editor for Charisma Media and has a passion for sharing the gospel through the written word. She holds two degrees from Regent University, a B.A. in Communication with a concentration in Journalism and a Master of Arts in Journalism. She is the author of the upcoming book, The Power of Suddenly: Discover How God Can Change Everything in a Moment. For interviews and media inquiries, please contact media@.