President Donald J. Trump is expected to personally address those attending the “Save America March” Wednesday near the White House. They’re gathering even now to show their support for the president to Congress and to the world.

The march began today, Tuesday, Jan. 5, and runs through the evening. The doors open again at 7 a.m. (EST) Wednesday, Jan. 6, as a show of strength while both houses of Congress meet to either certify the 2020 election or call for further investigation into a fraudulent outcome.

Throughout Tuesday, travelers were tweeting that their flights were full of Trump supporters and, by evening, tweets were reporting that Google Maps was no longer displaying directions to Washington, D.C.

“Patriots are already gathering in DC for tomorrow’s rally for President Trump,” tweeted @CassyWearsHeels.

Pastor Ché Ahn, founder and president of Harvest International Ministry, tweeted the link and encouraged people to watch,

A lineup of adamant Trump supporters took the stage tonight, including Lt. Gen. Mike Flynn (retired), who quieted the crowd, asking each person to breathe in the fresh air of liberty. He was recently pardoned by President Trump.

"Do not take for granted, in this country, the fresh air of liberty that we breathe," he said. "Never take for granted what you have. Never take for granted the sacrifice of millions of men and women who are our forefathers and our foremothers, who stood before us in the line of fire and elsewhere around the world for other people and for ourselves."

He went on to say he's embarrassed that the great United States cannot get its presidential election right.

"We should not, as Americans, accept this," Flynn said. "Washington has forgotten who they work for. And they work for 'We the People.'"

Flynn quieted as the crowd as they chanted their love for him. He went on to talk about how freedom is in the DNA of Americans. He appealed for strength within the members of Congress who are gathering as a House and Senate Wednesday to review and vote.

"We will not stand for a lie," Flynn said.

Also taking the stage was George Papadopoulos, a former adviser to President Trump who was also recently pardoned.

He said, "There are but two parties right now: traitors and patriots."

Papadopoulos rallied the crowd to remember the names and the bravery of the House and Senate members who will stand before their peers while in session Wednesday to fight the unlawful 2020 election.
