

Perry Stone's Disturbing Prophetic Dream Warning

Could Perry Stone's latest troubling dream be a prophetic warning for Christians in America?

Stone has been a prophetic voice for years, sounding the alarm of what is coming to our world. One of the ways he says God speaks to him is through dreams. However, his latest troublesome dream just may be a warning for Christians in America of what is coming next.

"In this dream, it appeared to me that everyone that was with me in the dream or that I was seeing in the dream were all Christians," Stone says.

In this dream, Stone says laws had been passed in order to control a group of people by using federal government agencies. By passing these laws, the government had tracking control over the people. While Stone acknowledges that satellite and phone technologies have the ability now to do some tracking over us, Stone says this tracking was on a totally different level.

"This was completely different because what had happened is that the Christians in America had completely, totally had all their freedom to travel freely taken from them," Stone says.

In this dream, Christians could not do the things they desired to do. Limitations and stipulations were put in place on Christians and their ability to freely move about.

"We were limited the distances that we could go each day," Stone says. "And if we were to go beyond those distances...the way the cars were set up...you would be fined."

"I did see gas vehicles there. Gas was still in existence, but there was a limitation of all gas vehicles," Stone continues.

Stone says going over the limited mileage per day was part of an environmental protection charge. More than the charge and driving limitations alone, a strain was placed on the body of Christ at-large.

"They could care less about your religious freedom, they could care less about you assembling in your worship. In fact, they preferred you not to assemble," Stone says.

"It was causing enormous stress and distress on pastors and ministries. And of course, a lot of them were having to go to social media, which again, was being monitored heavily," Stone continues.
