

Pope Francis' Reform Agenda: Is the Vatican Abandoning Biblical Truth?

In a recent YouTube interview, Pastor Mike Signorelli, Rabbi Eduardo Arroyo and JP tackled one of the most pressing issues facing Christianity today—biblical illiteracy and the growing threat of deception within the church. The conversation raises concerns about the Catholic Church's direction under Pope Francis and the potential for these changes to lead millions into apostasy.

At the center of the controversy is Pope Francis' latest move—a sweeping reform initiative signed while he was hospitalized with double pneumonia.

Despite being in a weak and vulnerable state, the Pope approved a new three-year process for global Catholic Church reforms, which includes discussions on controversial topics such as the inclusion of women as deacons and greater acceptance of LGBTQ individuals. This process will culminate in a major summit in 2028, potentially altering the Catholic Church's trajectory in ways that many fear could further distance it from biblical principles.

Cardinal Mario Grech, who is overseeing the reform efforts, called this “a sign of hope,” claiming the Pope's actions will push the church “toward a new missionary impulse.”

But not everyone shares this optimism. During the podcast, Pastor Mike sounded a warning: “The cost of being biblically illiterate is your soul.” He emphasizes that when people fail to anchor themselves in Scripture, they are easily swayed by teachings that sound appealing but deviate from God’s truth.

Radar added to the discussion, pointing out how dangerous it is when doctrine becomes diluted to fit cultural trends: “If the devil can’t stop us from gaining knowledge, he can pollute what we gain.” His concern? That many within the church may not even realize they are being led astray.

While Pope Francis’ hospitalization has led to speculation about his possible resignation, his approval of these sweeping reforms suggests he has no intention of stepping down.

The Vatican even released a photo of him celebrating Mass in the hospital chapel, reassuring the world that he remains engaged. But with his health failing, some fear that these changes are being pushed through hastily—without the level of biblical discernment such weighty decisions require.

The bigger question remains: Are these reforms bringing the Catholic Church closer to the truth of God’s Word, or are they a further step into the apostasy that the Bible warns about? As 2 Timothy 4:3 reminds us, “The time will come when people will not put up with sound doctrine. Instead, to suit their own desires, they will gather around them a great number of teachers to say what their itching ears want to hear.”

For now, these reforms are setting the stage for a significant shift in the Catholic Church’s direction. Whether that shift leads to renewal or further compromise remains to be seen.
