

Pro-Life Group Exposes Planned Parenthood's Eye Popping 'Culture of Death'

A pro-life organization alleges Planned Parenthood is paying a substantial amount of money to its affiliate CEOs—more than the average salary doled out by most nonprofits.

The American Life League (ALL) released a new report through its STOPP International effort—a Planned Parenthood watchdog—finding Planned Parenthood affiliate CEOs made a total of $16.8 million in 2020, up from just over $13 million in 2015.

Figuring the Planned Parenthood average out as $317,000, ALL noted the average pay for nonprofit CEOs in America is $184,809, according to .

Hugh Brown, executive vice president of ALL, explained why he believes the “STOPP 2023 Report on Planned Parenthood CEO Compensation” is so important.

“Planned Parenthood has been around as long as abortion has been around,” he said. “Their founder Margaret Sanger ... drove the whole movement to legalize birth control. She drove the whole movement to legalize abortion. She was really at the center of the culture of death.”

With Planned Parenthood “lauded” in culture and at the center of not just abortion rights, but also contraceptive and now “transgender ideology,” Brown said it’s essential to explore the dangers and problems he believes are perpetuated by the controversial organization.

“Planned Parenthood is painted as something that it’s not, and it’s important that we expose the truth,” Brown said. “And CEO salaries and the CEO report is something we found that people are very interested in.”
