

Protesters Rally Against the Terrible Scourge That Plagues the Nation

The Restoration Project gathered Wednesday at the Lincoln Memorial in a silent assembly to draw attention to a terrible scourge that has plagued our nation and especially the African-American and minority communities for far too long: Abortion.

Did you know that Planned Parenthood was started by a racist who advocated for the mandatory sterilization of minorities and believed that the greater good would be served by limiting the “inferior races” of the population? And did you know that in New York City today, more black babies are aborted than are born?

That’s right. Margaret Sanger, hero of the left, who once spoke at a Ku Klux Klan meeting and held the same beliefs in eugenics as Nazis, formed The Birth Control League (later Planned Parenthood) to limit the “unfit” races to achieve racial superiority.

But enough is enough.

Catherine Davis, founder and president of The Restoration Project gathered community leaders to the Lincoln Memorial Wednesday to proclaim just that.

Attendees included Rev. Dean Nelson of Human Coalition and Alveda King among others who valiantly shed light on this genocide that has been taking place in our nation and gone under the radar for far too long.

The Restoration Project has a petition to proclaim the sanctity of life. It reads:

To the Honorable Members of the United States House of Representatives and Senate:

The Restoration Project upholds three pillars: Sanctity of life, family and education.

Daniel Patrick Moynihan, a sociologist at the time, warned that black men were being alienated from their roles as husbands and fathers in the black family. His prediction of distortions in the black family structured have proved true and government reports are that more than 72 percent of black children grow up in single-parent, female-headed households. This matriarchal pattern has consumed the black family over the past 47 years and the case for national action remains.

The rebuilding of the family is essential to creating a culture of uprightness, evenhandedness and virtue in black America and the restoration of fatherhood is vital to that culture.
