

Radical Islamists Know Exactly Where to Hit Next

Radical Islamists know exactly where to cripple America, historian and author William Forstchen warned nearly two years ago. Yet in that time, terrorists continue to strike.

“ISIS is masters of asymmetrical warfare, a different kind of warfare,” Forstchen says. “They’re not going to go after the hard targets. They’re not going to go to Fort Hood or Fort Bragg. They’re going to go after the soft targets of America.”

Since his words, radical Islamists shot up a Christmas party in San Bernardino, California, and a weekend party at Orlando’s Pulse nightclub.

What’s next?

“What’s the softest target in America? Our schools.”
