

Randy Weston Discusses Generational Divide, Pandemic's Influence and Plans to Minister Abroad

Randy Weston is the lead artist and founder of Judah Band. This amazing group has a very unique sound. They have matured in the industry through the years. They are fresh, exciting and extremely creative.

Our conversation was super informative. Learning from Randy how he sees the gospel evolving among the young people was insightful. God is truly pouring into the Millennials.

Randy shares his thoughts on how he looks for God in everything. He believes God is so big, and He often asks God to reveal Himself in everything and everywhere in his life. Randy believes the more we want to see God in our lives, the more God will reveal Himself and expand our view even more.

Judah Band's mission is to bring glory to God. The band plans to go travel outside of the United States, with a vision of hosting tent service tours outside of the church walls. They would love to go where the people are, ministering to them all over the world.

Randy says he is done with "over-salting the salted people." He says, "The power of God, the Word of God is never to separate people, that is not God." When discussing Millennials and Generation X, or Baby Boomers, Randy says not all traditions are bad. It's the traditions of man that separate people. Randy believes this is the time of the great reveal in which God is revealing Himself more in this season.

Randy says He loves God more than ever now. He has learned so much about himself during the pandemic. He has been asking the Father more questions. Randy believes God is the only one with all the answers, so why not ask Him?
