Comfort told CBN News his Living Waters office, located in Bellflower, California, experienced a deeply troubling incident on July 20 when staff noticed something wasn't quite right.

Comfort's wife, Sue, reviewed the surveillance footage and was shocked by what she found.

"A man wearing a hoodie walked onto the property, then went onto the roof and checked a door," he said. "When he couldn't open it, he came back down, walked to the car...tried to break into it. Then brazenly wandered over to one of our warehouse garages – and crawled under the door."

The man reportedly never came out, meaning he was likely still inside as she reviewed the footage. Comfort's team called the police, and authorities quickly arrived, ushering in what Comfort described as a "scene straight out of a movie."
