

New Reality Show Provides Solution

The fate of television is getting ready to change, and it's starting with web-based evangelist and author Ty Adams. Reality television will soon offer a solution to troubled relationships and broken marriages, as Adams produces the three-part DVD production, The Real Housewives of the Bible.

Adams became frustrated after learning of the current divorce rate, realizing the upsetting ratio of available men to single women and seeing how society negatively portrays relationships.

"There is a place for reality television, if it's reality," says Adams. "TV and multimedia has certainly a place in society, but we should be able to use those airwaves to be able to capture God's voice. I think in fact God was the first television and movie producer—He captivated His audience through stories. He created images in the minds of those who listened to Him. So God loves reality TV—as long as there's a solution provided that stands with the word of God."

The Real Housewives of the Bible amplifies the relational issues of 12 women. One depiction in the series is of Abram and Sarah. Sarah is unable to bare children, so Abram becomes involved in an adulterous affair and a child comes about as a result of that.

Infertility, loneliness, adultery—tribulation pulled right from what Ty Adams calls "the blueprint." "I look at the Bible as our romance novel. It is our love letter to us, from Him. I went to the source of love itself. Why look at anything else? You have to go to the original manufacturer of love and relationships."

The content captured in video form is accompanied by a challenging six-week study journal. Adams says the study will not only allow women to get together and heal themselves of relationships, but it will help women “do a makeover” on their lives.

“[God] wants to teach you and show you what real love is. When you fall into that kind of love relationship with God, it will become a mirror for any personal relationship that you have on a horizontal level. It is based on the vertical relationship you have with God. All He needs is just an ounce of a chance. And if you give that, God can maximize every area of your life and turn it around.”

The Real Housewives of the Bible can be ordered online at . Adams says the funds collected from this production will fund the kingdom. Adams and her company, Heaven Enterprises, plan to create sitcoms and movies.

“We’re creating movies that portray our own lives, that bring the Word of God to life and providing wholesome entertainment for families. This is not an advice or a how to. This is actually wisdom that is pulled from the love application itself, the love manual itself, in terms of how to be able to solve relationships.”

Adams shares that she can hear the Lord audibly speak concerning the need for productions such as The Real Housewives of the Bible. “The fate of television is getting ready to change. Audiences will be shouting, ‘The Christians are coming, the Christians are coming!’”
