

Revival Hits Times Square as Sean Feucht Preaches the Gospel

Just as he was exclaiming to all of those in attendance, “All the angels know is breakthrough!,” a soaring eagle appeared on the large matrix board in Times Square.

“You can’t make this stuff up, people!” Feucht said on Facebook. “The screens in Times Square showed this right as I was declaring!”

That was only part of the story Sunday night in the famous part of Manhattan, where hundreds gathered to hear the renowned evangelist bring Jesus to a city starving for God’s Word.

Feucht said on Facebook that he has “been dreaming of doing this here since my first time walking through Times Square as a teenager. Tonight was a kiss from heaven.

“God loves this city. Give Him your burdens and receive His salvation and peace! If God can do it in Times square, He can do it anywhere. ... Revival just hit Times Square. No one wants to leave tonight.”

Feucht has a new documentary about his “Let Us Worship” tour in 2020, which brought people together during the COVID lockdown. “Superspreader will hit the theaters on Thursday, Sept. 29.
