The former star of Duck Dynasty and Dancing With the Stars announced the meaning behind their daughter's name in April. She says it's based on her rendering of Proverbs 16:24: "Gracious words are like honey, sweetness to the soul and health to the body."

In her Instagram post, she detailed the sweet connection she has to the verse in her relationship with husband, Christian Huff. During the start of their relationship they studied Proverbs together and Robertson Huff recalls how she related the verse to him first.

"I called him the boy with the honey words," she wrote, speaking of his kind nature and the healing he brought to her life that she "didn't even know" she needed.

During a People interview, Robertson Huff spoke of the significance of calling Honey by her name even before she was born.

"Christian and I, really before we even knew it was a girl or a boy, we decided on a girl and a boy name, and so as soon as we found out it was a girl, we knew her name. It's been really sweet to get to call her by name and just know that," she said.

Honey's due date came and passed on May 6, with the 23-year-old taking to social media to frame the waiting period as a source of encouragement to others.

"it's hard to be patient. it's hard to sit in the uncomfortably of being 'almost' to a miracle you're waiting for. It's hard when you pray and pray and pray but nothing seems to be happening,” she wrote. “But I’ve realized my prayers are for my will, my wants, my timing, and out of my rush.”

Now the young author and speaker embarks on the adventure of life as a family of three, confident that “it’s not my will, but it is His that will be done,” Robertson Huff says. {eoa}
