

Shame on John Roberts!

It was with disbelief that I saw the news of the Supreme Court's 5-4 decision—with Chief Justice John Roberts casting the deciding vote—to strike down the Louisiana abortion law.

As a believer and as a person of common sense, the simple provision that was in dispute—that doctors in abortion clinics need to have admitting privileges in local hospitals—makes no sense. It is just common sense that, in emergency cases, doctors at abortion clinics need to be able to get to the closest hospital to get help for the mother or child.

Since the horrific decision to legalize infanticide or the murder of children in 1974, more than 60 million precious boys and girls have been denied the chance to live, go to school, have a family and make a difference in the world. God will not hold guiltless a nation that kills 1 million children every year.

I join my friend Dick Simmons in California in calling for 1 million men to stand up to bring our country back from this insanity.

This is the first abortion case to be decided during Donald Trump's term, and it is a clarion call to the fact that we need our president for four more years, as it is now obvious that we need two more justices on the Supreme Court to protect the rights not only of the unborn but of believers as well.

In my book God, Trump and the 2020 Election, I put forth the case, and am now even more convinced, that God has sent us Donald J. Trump to help bring our nation back to the principles and foundations on which it was built.

Today's ridiculous decision goes against all logic and should be a final warning to every American who loves the country and every believer who cherishes their faith that the stakes in the upcoming election, which is just five months away, are high.

Shame on you, John Roberts, for betraying all that is good.
{eoa}

Stephen Strang is the CEO of Charisma Media, the largest charismatic media company in the U.S., and the author of God, Trump and the 2020 Election.