

‘Sound of Freedom’ Nears Astronomical Box Office Mark

The movie Sound of Freedom is very close to making $150 million in total domestic box office revenue.

According to Box Office Mojo, the film garnered $12,409,300 in its fourth weekend of release. As of Sunday, the film’s box office receipts total $148,972,065.

“Throughout our fourth weekend, audiences have continued to show up and support Sound of Freedom, and our theatrical partners have given us ample real estate to meet that continued demand,” said Brandon Purdie, head of Theatrical Distribution at Angel Studios. “We now know that this incredible film is going to surpass the $150 million mark domestically, and we’re strongly positioned to go well past that.”

As CBN News has reported, Sound of Freedom opened on the Fourth of July as a summer surprise to critics, and it has continued to stun Hollywood with its overwhelming success at the box office. The faith-based film finished number one on opening weekend, number two on its second weekend and then finished at number three this past weekend beating the latest installment of the blockbuster movie franchise Mission: Impossible.

The film is based upon the true story of former government agent Tim Ballard who quit his job to go and rescue a little girl from sex traffickers in the Colombian jungle. In the process, Ballard ends up saving 123 people, 55 of whom were children, from one mission alone.
