

'Sound of Freedom' Touches Thousands of Lives in Packed Theaters

Gina Carano, who became famous for her role in the Disney+ series "The Mandalorian" before presumably being axed from the show over social media posts that upset those on the left, wrote Wednesday she was deeply moved by the newly released film "Sound of Freedom."

"I was grateful to watch it in a theater full of other human beings," she wrote in a Twitter post. "The theater was packed. It was a beautiful thing to see the support."

Carano continued, "Tears definitely flowed throughout the film, with a heavy enlightening of what is happening in the world today, but also with hope that this topic is finally gaining more traction and touching the hearts of people who can help make a difference. Maybe we all can, just by becoming more aware. Support this movie. Go see it."

"Sound of Freedom" chronicles the real-life experiences of former U.S. government agent Tim Ballard, who left his job at the U.S. Department of Homeland Security in the early 2000s to launch Operation Underground Railroad, a nonprofit organization dedicated to rescuing children from sex trafficking and the modern-day slave trade.

Ballard spoke with CBN's Faithwire about the true stories that inspired the film from Angel Studios:

"If you don't feel Jesus ... you're not gonna do this," Ballard said of his work to rescue children. "And if you try, you're not gonna last—at least I wouldn't. Everything is faith to me. Everything is knowing what Jesus says about hurting kids. ... He's clear where He stands on it, and that gives you confidence in the Lord.”

Actor Jim Caviezel, who portrays Ballard in “Sound of Freedom,” told CBN’s Faithwire the work Ballard does is a true outpouring of his faith in God.

For the rest of this story, visit our content partners at .
{eo}

Reprinted with permission from . Copyright © 2023 The Christian Broadcasting Network Inc. All rights reserved.