

Streamer N3on Admits Fame Left Him Empty as Bryce Crawford Points Him to Jesus

Bryce Crawford didn't set out to debate N3on when the popular streamer joined him for his first appearance on a Christian podcast. Instead, the two spent nearly an hour discussing success, anxiety, fulfillment, faith and eternity, with N3on offering a series of candid admissions about the pressures of internet fame while Crawford repeatedly pointed him back to the hope he has found in Jesus Christ.

The conversation touched on everything from viral success and burnout to religion and heaven, but three themes emerged repeatedly: the emptiness of success, the fear of death and the reality that achieving life's biggest goals still cannot satisfy the human heart.

Success Didn't Bring the Peace He Expected

Despite becoming one of the internet's biggest livestream personalities, N3on admitted the success he once desperately wanted failed to provide the lasting fulfillment he imagined.

"I don't think I've ever in life as of right now like truly been fulfilled," he said. "I always thought what would make me fulfilled was like views... when I become one of the biggest streamers, when I make this money, I'm going to feel so happy. It's cool. It's fun. I got what I wanted, but true fulfillment and feeling at peace... no, it hasn't given me that."

Crawford responded by explaining that he spent years searching for fulfillment in other places before becoming a committed follower of Jesus Christ.

"The Christian perspective of Jesus would say instead of me doing good because I have to get to heaven, it's I do good because of what Jesus has already done," Crawford said. "That healed my broken heart and that peace right there... that's where I get my fulfillment now."

He added that one of the Bible's names for Jesus is the "Prince of Peace," explaining that true peace isn't rooted in success or circumstances, but in a relationship with Christ.

"I'm Afraid of Death"

The discussion became even more personal when N3on spoke candidly about one of his greatest fears.

"I'm afraid of death. I'm so scared," he said. "What's the point of me doing all this stuff like grinding, working my butt off? All the money you make, none of it matters. You're going to lose it within one second."

Crawford then asked him a direct question about eternity.

"How confident are you that you would go to heaven?"

"Maybe like a seven, maybe a six," N3on replied.

Rather than debating him, Crawford explained why he believes salvation cannot be earned through personal effort.

"I couldn't even fix my broken heart here," Crawford said. "There's no way I could work my way to perfection. ... What Jesus did on the cross is righteous and justified and wiped my slate clean as if I've never done anything wrong."

For Crawford, the answer to the fear of death isn't found in personal goodness, but in the finished work of Christ.

“I Got Everything I Prayed For—and Then Stopped Praying”

Perhaps the interview's most striking moment came when N3on reflected on his spiritual life.

“I literally would sit down and I would cry and pray,” he recalled. “‘God, please. All I want in life is to become one of the biggest streamers. Please, please, please.’ I would do it every single day.”

Then came the admission that caught Crawford's attention.

“I achieved what I wanted to achieve and then just stopped praying.”

Although he reaffirmed that he still believes in Islam, N3on acknowledged he has drifted from practicing his faith.

“I do believe in Islam. I am a Muslim,” he said. “I haven't been praying much at all, which is disgusting. It's terrible... I need to get back on what I was doing before.”

Crawford responded by sharing his own testimony, explaining that before following Christ, he battled depression, anxiety and pornography before reaching the point where he planned to end his life at 17.

“I was going to take my life,” Crawford said. “I had a supernatural encounter with Jesus. It stopped me from taking my life.”

He added that after praying, “I haven't had [depression and anxiety] since that day. It's been over five years.”

As the interview drew to a close, Crawford shared a question that has guided his own walk with Christ.

“My sophomore year, I had a Bible teacher... He asked this question and I've never forgot it," Crawford said. "'Where do you find your satisfaction, your significance, and what gives you security?'"

Throughout the conversation, Crawford consistently returned to the message that lasting fulfillment, peace and assurance about eternity are found not in fame, wealth or accomplishments, but in Jesus Christ. N3on, meanwhile, openly acknowledged he is still searching for those answers.

As N3on continues wrestling with questions about fulfillment, faith and eternity, we encourage our readers to pray that he encounters the saving grace of Jesus Christ and comes to know Him as Lord and Savior.
