

Students Horrified After Forced to Take Bestiality Class

Parents and students alike are horrified after a class taught children about varying LGBTQ sexual acts, including bestiality.

The class was presented at Renmark High School in Australia, where some of the students were as young as 13 years old, according to Harbinger's Daily. Parents were not notified of the presentation prior to it taking place. The person presenting the material was not a regular staff teacher, and there were no teachers in the room at the time of the presentation.

The ninth graders were under the deception that they would be learning about "respectful relationships." However, things took a completely different turn when a slide show was used to present what the "+" meant in the LGBTQIA+ acronym.

The presenter took the opportunity to discuss her own fetishes in the graphic course as well.

Fourteen-year-old Courtney White described how disgusting the entire scenario was. "The first slide of the PowerPoint on the board was 'You can see queerly now.'"

The presentation implied that bestiality was common and accepted by those who are part of the LGBTQ community.

The teenagers quickly became upset with the situation, many asking to go to the bathroom to get out of the class.

"We're all just sitting there like, 'What are we doing here? Why are we learning about animals having sex with humans?' It was really disgusting; it was really uncomfortable," White said.

After this episode, White's mother decided to pull her and her siblings from the school.

The school has been working on damage control since the class took place. The principal, Mat Evans, acknowledged how the outside presenter has "been suspended from department schools while the department undertakes an investigation," according to ABC Net News.

This traumatic experience for both children and parents goes to show how dark and mixed-up sin has made our world. This is an imperative time for parents to take control of what their children are learning. Scripture tells us that how we train up children determines the way they will go when they are old. We cannot expect school systems, government, or culture to appropriately raise the next generation. This is a monumental moment for parents to solidly stand on the Word of God to raise their children.
