

Super Bowl MVP Nick Foles Has a New Goal: Becoming a Pastor

The Philadelphia Eagles are Super Bowl champs for the first time in history! After the game the coach and top players publicly gave glory to God for the win.

Christian players expressing their faith isn't new in the NFL—it's the revival that swept through the Super Bowl-winning Eagles locker room during the season that people just can't stop talking about.

In March, tight end Zach Ertz committed his life to Christ.

"I was baptized in March, got married the next day. Our marriage has been built on that foundation from the Word and Jesus and it's changed my life. And just to have these guys hold me accountable on a daily basis has been phenomenal," Ertz told CBN Sports Reporter Shawn Brown.

Only a few months later, wide receiver Marcus Johnson was baptized in a North Carolina swimming pool ahead of a game against the Carolina Panthers.

First time being Baptized! Corporate Worship is a beautiful thing!! Cleansed & Reborn in JESUS name!! #WholeHeartedly

— Marcus D. Johnson (@Mojomdj) Oct. 12, 2017

Five teammates — linebackers Jordan Hicks, Mychal Kendricks and Kamu Grugier-Hill, and wide receivers Paul Turner and David Watford — were baptized in the Philadelphia Eagles' recovery pool late last year, according to reports.