

Texas Court Forces Dad to Let 7-Year-Old Son Transition Into a Girl

A Texas father has lost his legal attempt to stop his ex-wife from turning their 7-year-old son into a girl.

Jeff Younger has been locked in a dispute with his ex-wife, Dr. Anne Georgulas, who has accused him of child abuse for not treating their son James like a girl. He says she's the one abusing their son by trying to change his biological gender.

Now, LifeSite News reports a jury and judge have collectively ruled against Younger, which appears to give Georgulas the go-ahead to turn James into "Luna."

Conservative commentator Matt Walsh tweeted, "I can't get over this case in Texas. A mother decided that her 7-year-old boy is really a girl because he liked the movie Frozen. The husband insisted that he's a boy. Courts got involved. Jury just ruled that, yes, the boy is a girl and he will now be 'transitioned' into one."

"I don't think people realize just how monumental this case is. We've just crossed a threshold as a society. There's no going back. These are very dark times," Walsh writes.

Younger said he's simply looking out for the best interests of his James who identifies as a boy when he's with his dad and only expresses interest in femininity when he is near his mother.

James' father writes on his website, , "When James is with me, he shows no signs of wanting to be a girl when given the choice. Even when in female company, away from me, James rejects a female gender expression."
