

The Chosen Drops Thrilling Sneak Peek Into Season 6

Fans of The Chosen are getting glimpses into the show's most intense season yet.

In the newly released sneak peek, the disciples are reeling from Jesus' arrest when a man named Matthias arrives with critical information. Working for Nicodemus, Matthias tells the group that Nicodemus has convinced the high priest to delay Jesus' trial.

The news leaves the disciples wrestling with what to do next. Matthias warns them to leave Lazarus' house and find somewhere unexpected to hide before authorities can locate them and compel them to testify as witnesses.

Yet the conversation quickly turns deeper—some question whether hiding is really the right response.

"We couldn't stop the arrest, but we could show up for Him in the trial," one argues. "Maybe that's how we show our faithfulness."

Another counters with the bigger picture: "If all of us are in prison, who will go out and spread His message? We have to think beyond the immediate."

The scene captures the chaos surrounding the disciples as everything they thought they understood unravels. With Jesus in custody, Judas exposed as His betrayer and the threat of arrest hanging over them, the group must decide whether faithfulness means stepping forward or staying hidden for what comes next.

And this intense glimpse into Season 6 isn't the only thing The Chosen has revealed. The series took to X with another exciting look at what audiences can expect. Showing a picture of Jesus wearing a crown of thorns, the series wrote:

His life was given, not taken. Season 6 streams on @PrimeVideo November 15. The Chosen Crucifixion film releases in theaters March 12, 2027.

As we get closer to Season 6, it's clear that what is coming next will be the most emotionally gripping and beautiful season yet of the hit show.
