

The Demonic Secret Behind the Viral '6-7' Trend

It seems kids everywhere are going crazy over the viral "6-7" trend, repeating those two numbers. It became so popular that "6-7" became the word of the year.

While children are insistent that it doesn't mean anything and the point of it is to know something adults do not, ultimately, there is something much darker and deeper behind its origins.

The "6-7" trend is believed to have originated from rapper Skrilla's song, "Doot Doot." Skrilla, however, is more than just a musician. He has previously stated his deep entrenchment with the occult.

"I'm a Santo," Skrilla said in one podcast interview. "I do that sacrifice 's just real life."

"You've sacrificed a goat?" The interviewer asked Skrilla.

"I sacrificed goats, chickens, 'm not allowed to explain it," Skrilla replied.

He also discussed the Yoruba religion and how he could “put bad spirits” on a person as well.

What seems innocent or playful on the surface is often a doorway for darkness. The viral “6-7” trend may appear harmless to children, but its origins reveal a hidden agenda steeped in deception and the occult. These numbers are not just a game—they are connected to spiritual forces seeking to influence young minds, normalizing exposure to practices that open the door to demonic activity. In a world where media and trends constantly bombard children, this is a stark reminder that spiritual warfare is real, subtle and relentless, targeting the hearts and minds of the next generation.
