

Time to Challenge the Transgender Hoax

Female athletes of all ages surrounded President Trump on Feb. 5 when he signed a ruling called the “No Men in Women’s Sports Executive Order.” From the Oval Office, Trump said: “The radical left has waged an all-out campaign to erase the very concept of biological sex and replace it with a militant transgender ideology. With this executive order, the war on women’s sports is over.”

But as it turns out, one stroke of a pen didn’t end this war after all. Sixteen days later, the governor of Maine—Janet Mills, a Democrat—defied Trump by stating that she would take the ruling to court to keep biological boys and men in women’s sports. The president replied by threatening to withhold federal funding from Maine until Gov. Mills complies.

Things got worse for Mills when a video surfaced of her gyrating on a stage during a 2022 Halloween drag show. She is loud and proud about her defiance. Mills has thrown her full support behind the trans community, and she’s willing to ignore an executive order to push her views.

Not many Americans are willing to dance with the governor on this issue. A new poll from The New York Times has found that 79% of Americans—both Republicans and Democrats—do not want transgender-identifying men in women’s sports. And that number is 12% higher than a poll taken just two years ago. That means a small minority of political radicals are pushing this agenda, and they really don’t care what the average American believes.

Many of my foreign friends now ask me regularly, "What's going on with the U.S.?" They are baffled. They are also losing respect for America because a growing number of our leaders have made drastic shifts when it comes to moral values—particularly in the realm of sexuality and gender.

Meanwhile, we are expected to accept this craziness because it's "inclusive." Of course, if you challenge the transgender movement or dare to label gender confusion as a psychological disorder, you will be called a hater.
