

What if the God You Worship Is Different Than the God of the Bible?

Most people, whether they are aware of it or not, perceive God through the lens of their own lives.

Sometimes this can be through religious traditions, family members, cultural norms or just their general life experiences.

Through my 30-plus years of study, I have come to realize is that there is a very different God in the Bible than what our life experiences may have taught us.

It's important that we as Christians worship the God of the Bible, and not our ideas of who God is. Some people take it for granted that they know God, yet when they compare their concept of God to the God revealed in the Scriptures, they can find that they are entirely wrong.

I realize that some Christians will be satisfied with what other people have told them about God, or who they think God is, based on their life experiences, and they will stop at that.

Other Christians, who want to know who God really is, and worship Him in Spirit and truth, will find that my book Ideolatry will help immensely.

By the way, here is a 5-star Amazon review from September 28th of this year that moved me:

This is a very challenging book in a good way. It makes one rethink their theology and what the truth really is concerning God and what He has done for us and how He interacts with us. The book is instructive and teaches the truth of the Word with the Word, letting the Truth speak for itself. Dr. Masek simply points the reader to the Word. I particularly liked the diagram/description of how God separates us from sin as far as the east is from the west on page 338. Idolatry clearly explains God's role in our life and what our responsibility is but also God's plan of salvation through Jesus Christ. I am especially appreciative of the contents of the book but even the quality of the paper and printing add to the impressiveness of the book. – Rhonda Stone
