

Which Conservative Leader Just Said that Ted Cruz Will Take on the 'Washington Establishment'?

The man who has spent decades pointing out media bias against Christians and conservatives has bypassed the media, releasing an online video endorsing Sen. Ted Cruz as the best hope of gaining the 2016 Republican presidential nomination. Brent Bozell founded the Media Research Center and is president of the Conservative Victory Committee. A conservative stalwart, he described how the GOP's numerically inferior donor class manages to foist its candidate on the party over and over again. "The Republican Party Establishment is counting on conservatives being divided, so they can again nominate a moderate, do-nothing candidate," he warned. "Make no mistake: If the Republican Party repeats what it has done the last two presidential elections, Republicans will lose. I guarantee it," Bozell said in the video. "On the other hand, if we nominate a principled, passionate conservative America can count on to restore her greatness, there will be an outpouring of support." Bozell continues, "We need a courageous conservative who tells the truth and does what he promises. We need to nominate an inspiring leader who has proven he is willing to take on the Washington Cartel and buck the political establishment of both parties. We need a leader who will win, and reignite the promise of America." "There are some good conservatives running for president," he states, "but we need more than a 'campaign conservative' – we need a consistent conservative who has led the fights important to us. Ted Cruz is this leader." L. Brent Bozell III has founded ForAmerica, an organization committed to restoring America to its founding principles with an online army of almost 8 million members. It's clear which presidential hopeful he wants them to support in the 2016 primaries.
